Amateur newspapers from the American Antiquarian Society

The amateur newspaper occupies an unusual place in the history of journalism. An amateur journal is a periodical created to afford pleasure to its readers as well as to its editor and its publisher. The rage to publish, rather than profit, is the motive that most often induces people to become amateur journalists; and, throughout the history of the genre, most but not all amateur journalists have been juveniles. The Amateur Newspaper collection at the American Antiquarian Society consists of about 50,000 issues. There are more than 5,000 titles from approximately 1700 and 1800.

GALE PRIMARY SOURCES PLATFORM TOOLS – DOCUMENT VIEWER

The main content area shows the document title "The third world war game" by John Keegan, published in The Sunday Times (London, England) on Sunday, June 27, 1982, Issue: 8243. A yellow box highlights a toolbar on the right side of the page with icons for "Cite", "Send To...", "Download", "Print", and "Get Link".

On the left side, a "View Options" panel is open, also highlighted with a yellow box. It contains the following settings:

- Views: Document Image, Plain Text (OCR)
- Include in View: Article, Page
- Brightness: A slider control.
- Contrast: A slider control.

The document text is displayed in the center, with the title "The third world war game" highlighted in green. The text begins with "TRADING in futures is a risky business. There are great fortunes to be made in staking money on what price cocoa, copper or chrome will fetch three months hence. Equally there are great fortunes to be lost, as the Bunker brothers demonstrated trying to make a corner in silver in 1979. Future history is a safer market. The first notable essay in the medium, 'The Battle of Dorking' by Lieutenant-Colonel George Chesney, published in 1871, made its author a handsome profit. It also had an immediate effect on his times. Chesney's fantasy had Britain invaded by the Prussians, who overwhelm the tiny regular army and its undertrained Rifle Volunteer allies in a single battle. The military reforms of the 1870s, designed to keep at home an army at least equal in size to that abroad in the Empire, were in part a direct result of his awful warning. But if the historian of the future keeps his money safe, he lays his reputation on the line. The extraordinary Captain Danrit, populariser of the Yellow Peril, took things to extremes by dying on the morning day of the battle of...".

HOW IT WORKS

This tool takes the titles, subjects, and approximately the first 100 words from a subset of your top results and feeds them into an algorithm. Keywords shown in the graphics are those found most often in the text with your search term.

The topic for "Illinois" might bring up expected connections from the text like "Chicago," along with unexpected but commonly related terms like "water," "steel," and the names of people who appear frequently in documents about Illinois.

About This Archive

Sourced from the extensive holdings of the British Library, British Library Newspapers delivers a wide range of irreplaceable local and regional voices to reflect the social, political, and cultural events of the eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth centuries. These newspapers, emerging during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries as a crucial channel of information in towns and major cities, provide researchers with a unique, first-hand perspective on history. With more than 240 newspaper titles, the series is comprised of approximately 6.4 million pages of historic content, from articles to advertisements. This collection illuminates diverse and distinct regional attitudes, cultures, and vernaculars, providing an alternative viewpoint to the London-centric national press over a period of more than 200 years.

Note: Your institution may have access to all, some, or only one of these parts. To confirm, check with your instructor or librarian.

Part I: 1800-1900

Ranging from early tabloids like the Illustrated Police News to radical papers like the Chartist Northern Star, publications in Part I span a vast range of national, regional, and local interests. Other notable papers of Part I include the Morning Chronicle, with famous contributors such as Henry Mayhew and John Stewart Mill; the Graphic, publishing both illustrations and news as well as illustrated fiction; and the Examiner, the radical reformist and leading intellectual journal.

Part II: 1800-1900

Part II further expands the range of English regional newspapers and the political views represented in the programme. Researchers can find the newspapers of a number of significant towns and regions included in this collection: Nottingham, Bradford, Leicester, Sheffield, and York, as well as North Wales. The addition of two major London newspapers, The Standard and the Morning Post, helps capture conservative opinion in the nineteenth century, balancing the progressive, more liberal views of the newspapers that appear in Part I.

Part III: 1741-1950

Part III adds even more regional and local depth to the series, encompassing powerful provincial news journals like the Leeds Intelligencer and Hull Daily Mail, local interest publications such as the Northampton Mercury, and specialist titles such as the Poor Law Unions' Gazette. Other noteworthy titles in Part III include the Westmoreland Gazette, whose early editor, Thomas DeQuincy (of Confessions of an English Opium Eater) was forced to resign due to his unreliability.
